TRY THIS ON YOUR AUTOMOBILE

THERMOID BRAKE INSPECTION CHART

The up-to-date motorist must know in what space he can stop his car. The average motorist, experts say, uses his brakes from 20,000 to 30,000 times a year. Two-thirds of the motor accidents, they say, occur when cars are traveling less than 12 miles an hour. Bad brakes are said to be the cause of most of the accidents with which the motorist world is charged. Out of these conditions has come a nation-wide movement to have motorists inspect their brakes at regular intervals, so as to be sure they are in perfect condition.

In connection with this movement, a chart has just been completed by experts, who have been testing hydraulic compressed brake lining, regarded as the best kind for general use under varied conditions on account of its moisture-resisting qualities. This brake lining is now in use on many of the American war cars and trucks in France.

REGULATE LEWLESSNESS

The Methods That Should Be Employed and Utilized for the Prevention and Reduction of Crime.

To the Editor of The Observer:

Crime has increased alarmingly in the war ridden countries, especially among the younger class of people. The increase of crime can be traced to the war. But here, in our country, crime has been increasing before we entered the war and probably will increase considerably while the war is going on. Many warnings have been sounded by judges, lawyers, etc., but very little has been done to reduce crime. What is the cause of this increase?

In my opinion there are a number of different causes, an inefficient police officers and police departments, shortage of police and peace officers, laxness in enforcing the law, too many technicalities in law, politics, the parole system, mismanagement of penitentiaries, etc. We all know that in many police departments officers are appointed more according to a political pull than on fitness and many officers are absolutely unfit for their duty. Many departments are very efficient, but are hampered by shortage of men. Most citizens are short on revenue and cannot afford to increase their police force.

Will Your Car Do This?

The chart represents, experts say, the first scientific calculation of exact distances within which a car equipped with proper brake mechanism should come to a stop under average road conditions. It shows what a car should do if its brakes are right.

The average lining for automobile brakes is made up, simply of strips of woven tape which are easily affected by moisture, gasoline, oil and the dust of the road. The kind preferred by particular motorists is made of asbestos fabric impregnated with what is called graptol, and then subjected to 2000 pounds to the square inch of thermoid hydraulic pressure for one hour's time.

Too many crimes go unpunished because of a technicality in the law. In the European countries where technicalities don't count, 80 per cent of murderers are convicted and here, in our own country, about 15 per cent. If for instance a man is found guilty by a jury of 12 men, why should he be granted another trial, because the judge made an error in writing the sentence or some similar mistake? There have been cases where two juries have found a man guilty and the third jury has found him not guilty. Who was right, the two juries or the one jury? Nine men out of a jury should be able to convict, where it requires twelve now and all technicalities should be abolished.

Too many men go unpunished for crimes they have committed because they have political friends who use their influence to have the charges dropped or continued from one term to another, until it practically is forgotten. Many men commit a crime, because they know that they will have enough influence to secure a parole. The parole system has been so greatly abused that it has become an inducement to commit crimes. Many a murderer has been sentenced for life and in a few years he finds himself right among us, because he has been paroled by a foolish governor.

In many, probably in most penitentiaries the prisoners are permitted to mingle, the youthful with the old hardened criminal. Many a young man that is not bad at heart when he enters his sentence, is a lot worse when he leaves, because of his association with the older criminals and many a man that never thought of using a drug, is a dope fiend when he leaves the penitentiary.

There are many remedies for increase of crime, but so far they have accomplished very little. In my opinion it takes a radical remedy to cure this evil, and this remedy is jurisdiction of the U. S. Government of criminal law and the police forces, the manner of which I will explain more fully.

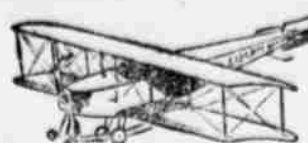

We should have a uniform criminal law for the whole United States, where now each state has different laws. If the government had the jurisdiction, extradition from one state to another would be unnecessary and witnesses could be summoned to any place by the government. Many a case has to be dropped because an important witness has left a state and cannot be compelled to return to give evidence.

Local politics and local influence could be easily overcome because the government could get a jury of men from a further locality. People would have more respect for the law, because they know that the government is strict and will enforce the law without fear or favor.

What I mean by government jurisdiction of the police department is that every officer would be in the pay of the government, under a civil service law. I would favor two classes, city police, and rural police.

A rural police officer would be in charge of a certain rural district and the city police would retain their present system. A police officer should receive a sufficient salary and should be compelled to enlist for at least five years. Every man who wished to enter the police service should pass a physical and mental examination and appointments should be made according to the highest percentage.

The government should establish a number of training camps in different parts of the country where a man had received an appointment, would receive military training to make him physically fit and receive mental training to make him mentally fit for a policeman. Here he would be taught the different laws, the way to handle a case in court, in fact, everything that would tend to make a good police officer. After receiving instructions for about six months he would then be assigned to some city. In strikes, riots, disasters, etc., the government could send a force of policemen instead of soldiers and I think they could accomplish more, too. If we had the government in control of the police forces now it would have been in a position to handle lawlessness caused by the I. W. W., etc.

If we could inaugurate such a system in a few years there would have a police force that could be called the best in the world and crime would decrease quickly, I am sure. It would be less expensive when everything would be under government control and would take a great burden off many cities.

Now some cities are overrun with crooks of all descriptions and the city police force is unable to control the situation because there are not enough officers. Peaceful citizens have to fear to be out after dark; thousands of dollars worth is stolen and never recovered.

If a city should be threatened with a crime wave, the government could send more officers. It is a habit of many police judges to give a crook as many hours to leave town, thereby forcing him upon another community. All the vagrants, bum doctors, etc., if convicted should be sentenced to labor.

The government could establish camps for them, where they could be used to build roads, reclaim land that is lying idle, and many other things. I would favor a yearly registration of every male over 17 years of age, thereby enabling the government to keep a record of every man. Many a crook is arrested and released because he was not identified. The government could keep complete identification bureaus in every medium sized city.

I have named only the main benefits that would be derived from government jurisdiction of the criminal law and the police forces and I think it is the only radical remedy for the increasing lawlessness. The whole country would be benefited by it and we would have a police force that would be a protection to the country and of which we all could be proud. We are spending millions of dollars for protection against other countries, why not for protection against our own element?

JOHN H. EDDERS, ...

Why Don't the Hops Follow Suit?

The Democrats of Iowa have decided to not put out a candidate against the Republican incumbent, Senator Kenyon, following Wilson's suggestion, and as an appreciation of Kenyon's loyal support of the administration and war measures. Similar action will be or has been taken by the Democrats of Idaho and Minnesota, and Borah and Nelson will be re-elected without opposition. But we haven't heard of the Republicans following that line of broad patriotism where the terms of Democratic senators expire.—Lincoln Bulletin.
